TOMMY WATSON

Yannima Pikarli (Tommy Watson) is an Indigenous artist from the Irrunytju community in Western Australia. His artwork Untitled (2014) looks at his connection to the land through abstract meditations on colour.

LET'S THINK...

Looking at this painting, what kind of landscape do you think Tommy was inspired by?

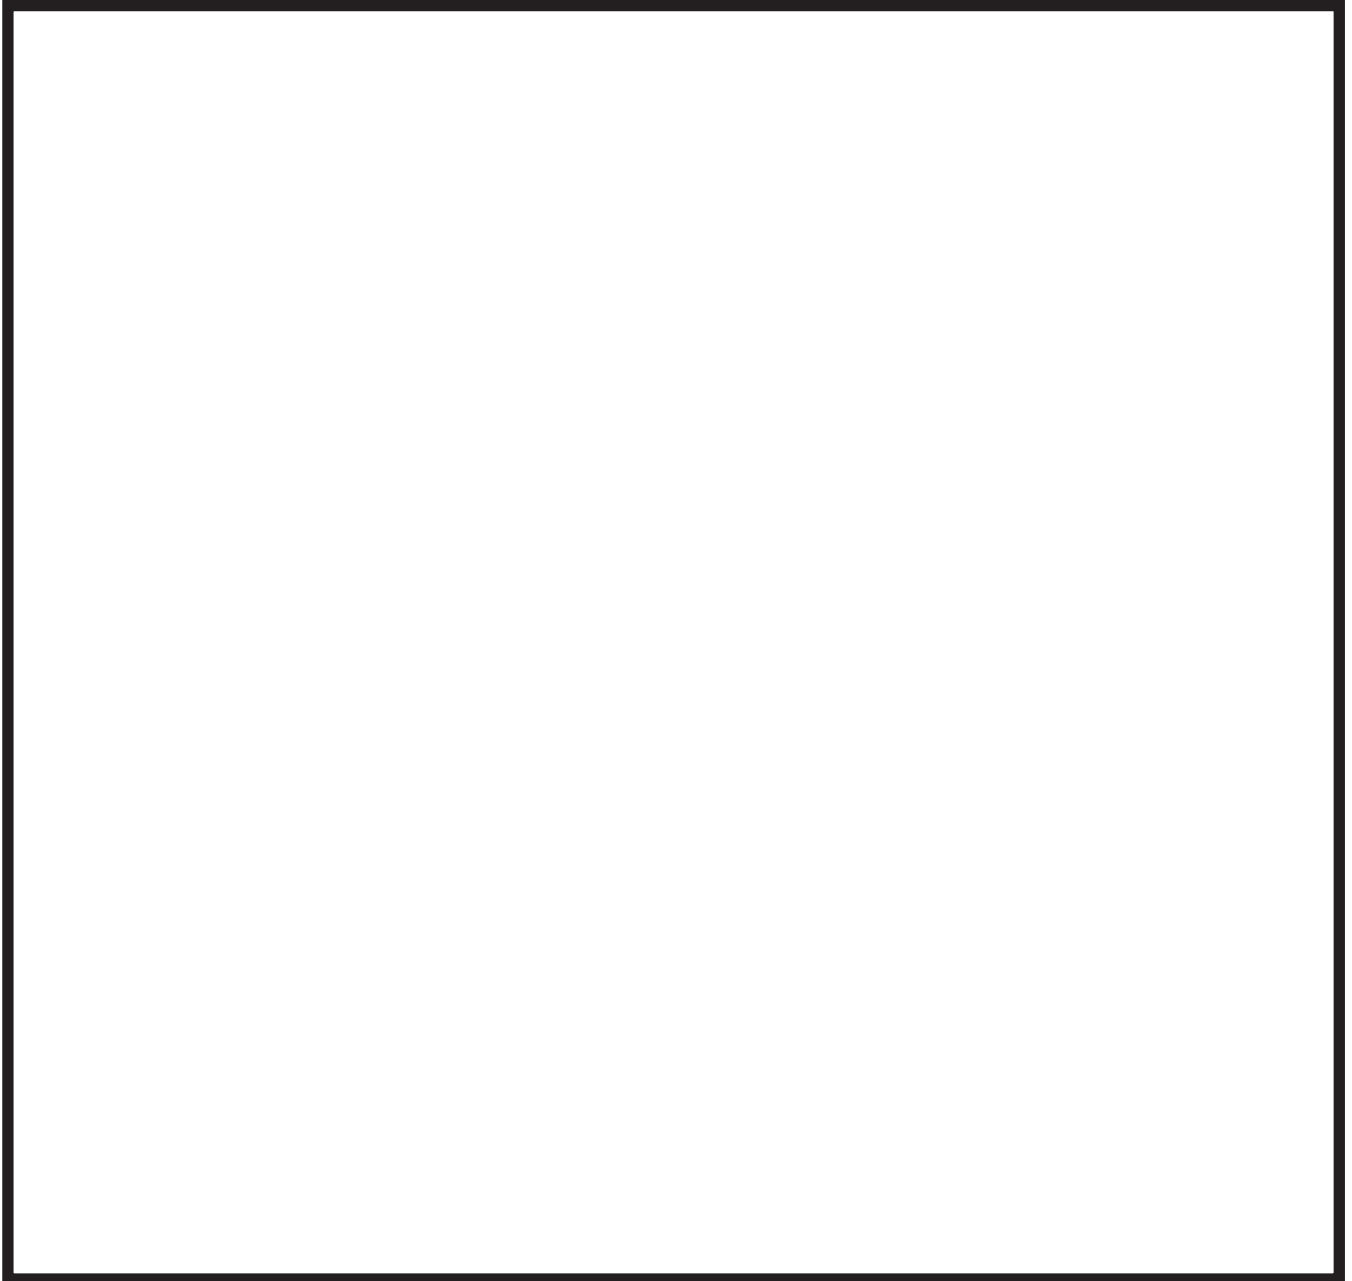

What does this painting make you feel?

What does it remind you of?

LET'S CREATE!

- Use colours that remind you of where you live to create an abstract* drawing that feels like home

*Abstract art does not try to show the world realistically. Instead shapes, colours, forms and lines are used to achieve its effect.

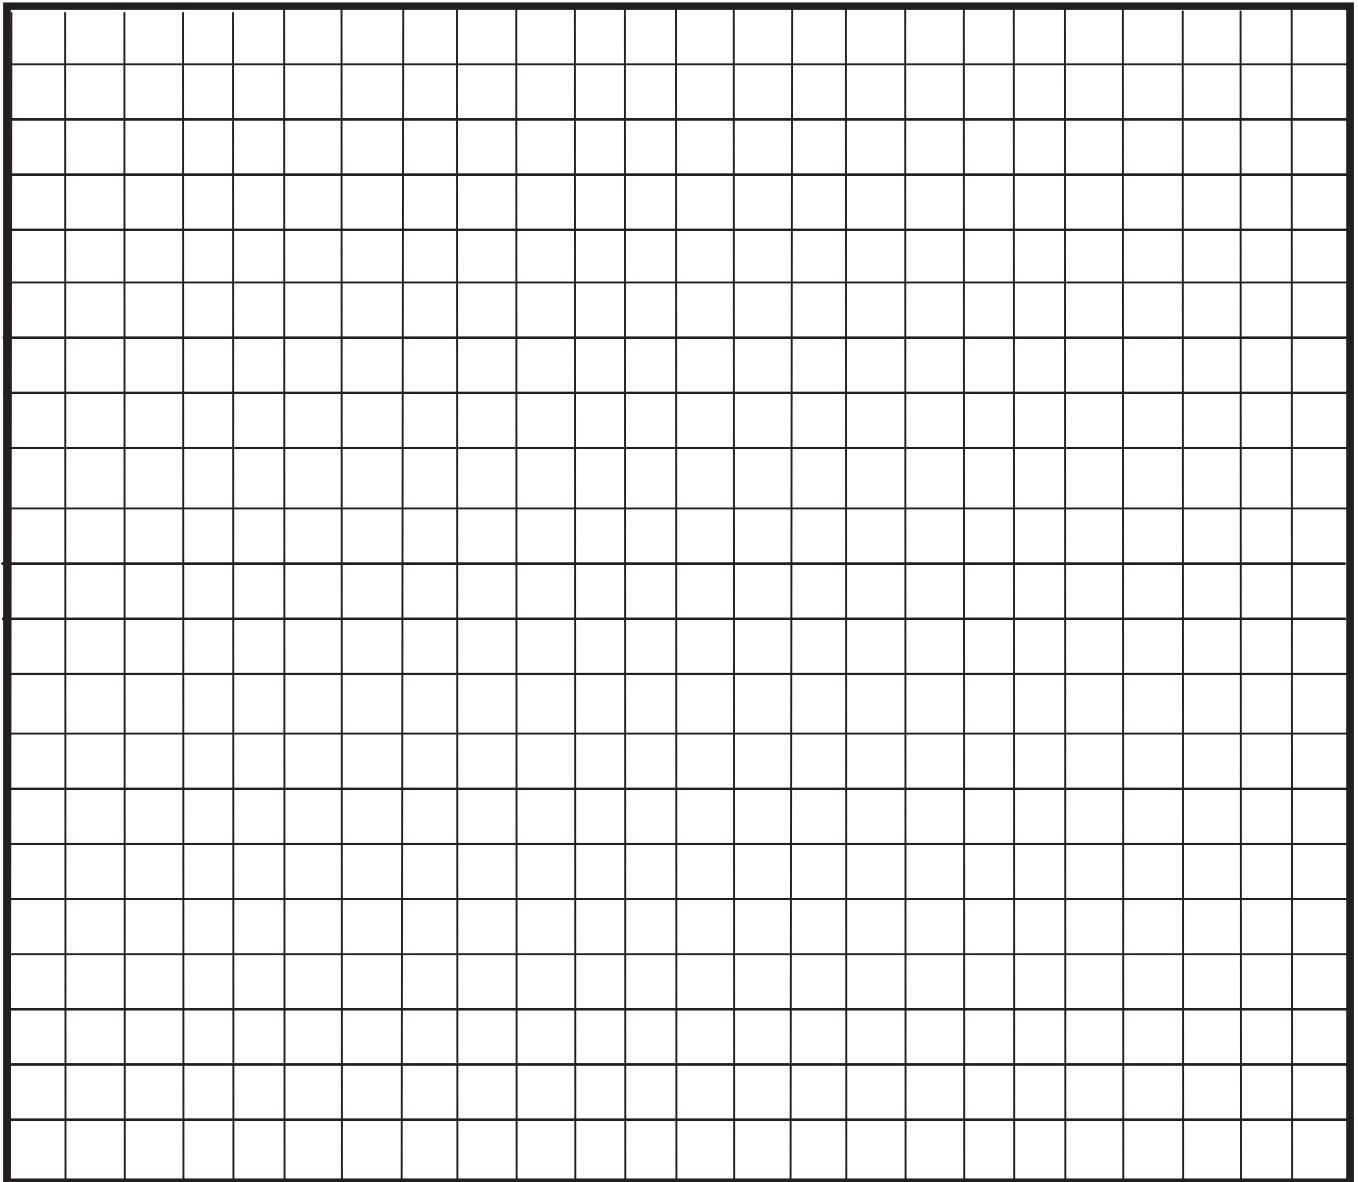

MATTHEW JOHNSON

In Matthew Johnson's colourful and highly pigmented* paintings, he mixes shiny pigments into oil paint to make them glow. In his work Aqua Lacuna (after Gabo) he paints colourful circles onto a grid.

LET'S CREATE!

Use a range of colours to fill in the squares in the grid below to create your own Matthew Johnson inspired work!

*Pigment is a coloured material (usually a powder) used to colour a liquid like paint, ink etc. If something is highly pigmented, it has a lot of pigment in it.
